

have been lost somewhere. It has taken priority over our relations in every sphere of life. Was that the purpose of money? Was money supposed to be an "end" by itself or a "means" to achieve the end goals of life? It took me time and brainstorming to realize that it was definitely not the former.. It might take you some time as well, but it is worth every minute that you spend convincing yourself on this aspect.

I also wanted to earn a lot of money. Not that I was in a race to have more money but I wanted money to make me financially free so that I could pursue my real dreams and goals of life. And as it is said, if you are really looking for something, the entire universe will conspire to help you get it.

I was looking out. I was shown a network marketing business.

I am sure many of you have heard the name of Amway. Different people in different countries and cultures have different views about the network marketing (multi level marketing) business. It is definitely not held in high esteem by most people. Well, I was now into it and the only thing that drove me into this network marketing business, and also drove me to build this business were some of the popular phrases that I had never heard earlier in my school, college or my job.

I was hearing words like "passive income", "retirement", "live your dreams", and many more. These instantly struck a chord with me somewhere. Soon, I realised that I was being pushed to invest a lot of my time into building the business, thus moving me farther away from my friends and family. In the lure of ultimately becoming financially independent and being able to spend more quality time with my parents, wife and children, I was actually going further away from them.

After giving 3 years of my valuable time, effort and money to this network marketing business, I quit it in 2007. But, as they say, Failure is your best teacher and everything happens for a reason. This "failed" business taught me some very important lessons, which ultimately became "the turning point" in my life. I knew clearly why I had joined this business, though I quit it without being "successful". I knew it had given me what I wanted. It had given me my dreams and goals. It showed me what freedom is all about. I now had big dreams and big goals to achieve in life courtesy, Amway. I knew exactly what I wanted to achieve.
