

A good start is half the battle won!

Step 5: Execute your Financial Freedom Plan

If you have a solid, detailed and a realistic plan, you are off to a great start. Congratulations on reaching this milestone.

On the other hand, it is just the beginning, so do not get too complacent about it.

Whatever you have done until now was probably a one time effort. Obviously, there may be times when you may have to tune your goals or timelines during your journey, but you will, never have to spend so much effort on planning again.

Most of your effort over the next few years will now go in execution of the plan. This step is your daily bread and butter on what needs to be done every day to reach what you have planned.

I will share a lot of my own experiences during the execution of my financial freedom journey in this section. We will go through each investment tool under each asset class. This will help you align all your long-term goals in the plan with the investment tools to be used to achieve those goals. So, let us go ahead with some of the most practical tips you will need while investing in any of the investing options.

Fixed Deposits

The first and the most obvious tool that I started using on this journey was fixed deposits.

We have already seen that bank fixed deposits provide a better interest rate than money kept in your savings account.

The first recommendation that I have for all budding financial freedom seekers is to make sure to have online banking enabled with your banker. It is not mandatory but it is highly advisable because soon you will have a
