

ends meet and are seen to be in need of some kind of work to continue to survive. What kind of life is this where we are so engrossed in our own survival that we cannot even think about bringing about any change in our society or doing something for anyone other than our own family?

This is exactly what I was going through, when I realized that there has to be a way out of this meaningless rat race. As you will see all through in this book, there is immense power in what we will refer to as the super power of compounded money. However, this book is not about retiring and leading a lonely life, neither is it about quitting challenges. This book is about achieving the most important personal freedom that every human being is looking for – your own financial freedom. Why is this important? Because the absence of financial freedom is the only thing which keeps us from achieving the best in life and from doing what we most enjoy. What do you really want to do with the time and money that you have?

Do you still want to go and work in a stressful job? Do you want to continue in the rat race and keep working for your money? Do you want to struggle for the next salary increment or promotion? Do you want to keep blaming your luck, government laws and the world for the fact that your business is not able to survive anymore? Does your family have to always take second priority because your boss or your business takes first priority? Do you still want to say that "You have no choice"? Do you still want to keep hating Mondays? Do you want to always be looking for a new job because you are not "satisfied" in your current job? Do you still want to feel victimized and continue to lead an unhappy life?

Or

Do you want to wake up every morning and decide what challenges you will overcome today? Do you want to drop your children to school because you have the freedom of time? Would you rather be with your family and friends at celebratory occasions, than be compelled to attend a client meeting? Do you want to be able to gift your friends and family on special occasions of their lives without thinking of the financial impact on you? Do you want to serve society and help your nation? Do you want the freedom to decide what you want to do? Do you want to do what you really enjoy rather than be compelled to earn more money?
