

You are finally at the doorstep of financial independence. Let me assure that this is by no means a small achievement. Less than 2% of the world's population dream of achieving this and less than 1% actually achieve it.

You are now at a stage where you are not compelled to work for anyone, unless of course you enjoy doing so. You finally have the freedom to do what you want to do. Your mind will now open up to unlimited opportunities. You can start to truly enjoy your life now.

This enjoyment could come from helping others, spending every day with your children and seeing them grow up, doing something worthwhile to improve our society, the country or the world, or it could be as simple as chasing your dreams of writing a book, being a professional guitar player, exploring the world, going for adventure trips....

It is only after you awaken, that you realise that you were sleeping.

Once you achieve financial freedom you can enjoy doing what you always wanted to do. Some of you may get over excited and quit your job having almost reached your financial goals. However, it is wise to be cautious, as there are certain important things to be kept in mind before you finally call it a day.

Health Insurance

Keep yourself and your family protected during this journey. Remember that you are not financially secure till you have completed the journey and therefore, both life and health insurance cover is important for you and your family.

Normally, if you were in a job, your organization would have covered you for your and your family's health insurance through the company's group insurance policy. The premium of such a group insurance policy is normally deducted from your salary automatically.

If you do not wish to be employed post your financial independence, it is extremely important that you and your family are adequately covered through a private health insurance provider before you quit your job and
