

2010), the US dollar appreciated heavily against the rupee, breaking all previous records. From ₹44, the price of one USD rose to ₹53. This in itself was a 20% jump in the money that I was earning in the US. The dollar continued to stay high and I took full advantage of this appreciation by transferring most of my money to India at a higher exchange rate.

- I received a cash award in my January 2012 salary slip, which till today, is an unknown element. I do not know from where it came and why, and that too at a time when there were no cash rewards as per company policy in those days.

With all this, by mid January 2012, I was sure of how to get the additional ₹50,000 per month. It proved to me once again that if one really wants to achieve something, and has the right intent, then the entire universe conspires to make it happen. The Alchemist and The Secret were coming true. I was certain that God existed and that He is helping me achieve my goals.

Trust me, the same will happen with you. So, do not ever abandon your goals. You will find a way out of a difficult situation or a demanding target if you keep trying with the right intentions. Things around you will change in a way that will help you to achieve your goals.

Nurture your nest egg

As and when you achieve Financial Freedom, you may leave your job or small business and focus on how to continue to nurture your nest egg. One of the most important things that will make sure that you take the right decisions to nourish your portfolio is sharpening your financial saw. I still read more than 10 to 15 articles everyday on the economic situation around me so that I can take informed decisions.

You must always make sure that you continue to beat inflation by acquiring the right knowledge and applying that knowledge to invest wisely. It will be easier to do that now since you are not dependent on your income anymore and have learnt the rules of the game.
