

MONOPOLIES

When there is only one seller of a particular product, this is called a monopoly. Because a seller who holds a monopoly does not have to compete with others on price, the consumer generally has to pay more for the goods. Lack of competition also means that monopolies are less likely to worry about making their businesses more efficient.

A market for a product with many sellers and only one buyer is called a monopsony.

See also: Who's in CHARGE? | Running an efficient BUSINESS | Let well enough ALONE