

A finite world

Earth has finite resources, and as our economies and populations grow, we consume more. Unless we learn to consume less, these resources will become scarcer and scarcer and ever more costly.