

enjoy their jobs and are happy to spend long hours at work, many people want to work as little as is necessary. In the end, the choice of what work we do, including how much money we can earn and how much of our time it will take up, is an economic one. To lead the life we would like, we must use our resources to provide us with the things we want and the time to enjoy them. We have to match our income to the lifestyle we have chosen.

WORK OR STUDY?

Choosing whether or not to go to college also involves an opportunity cost. Instead of the four or more years you spend studying and the tuition involved, you could get a job and earn money. On the other hand, with a college degree you likely have a better chance of getting the job you want, and probably a better salary in the long term.

On average, full-time workers in developed countries spend about 40% of their time at work.

See also: Going to WORK | Earning a LIVING