

job through no fault of your own if the company you work for fails, or you can't work because of illness. In many countries, the government provides financial support for people who are sick or unemployed, funded by the taxes you pay when you're earning. But often this is barely enough to cover the basics. So, when making plans, it's wise to consider some insurance. This could be saving money regularly to provide emergency funds, however, an insurance policy will give you more security, and can be paid for in installments. When you take on a loan or mortgage, you can get insurance that will cover your expenses if you are unable to pay. There are also insurance policies to give you an income, and pay for medical care, if you become ill or have an accident, and life insurance that will provide your family with money if you die.
