

In addition to payments for goods that we buy, more and more of us are having our paychecks paid directly into our bank accounts by electronic transfer. Our financial transactions are increasingly becoming electronic and, except for small purchases, we are tending to use far less cash. We can access our accounts and make some purchases directly from our smartphones. Even the comparatively small amounts of cash that we do use, we often get from our banks electronically, using our debit cards at an ATM (automated teller machine).

Cashless

While we may still use cash for buying small everyday items, we are increasingly making purchases online or even through our phones.
