

The RIO Questionnaire determines your knowledge about, use of, and relevance of these different tactics for supporting reliable income. If your longevity goals are a high priority, then you want to make sure you have a well-thought-out reliable income section within your RIO-Map and that you have filled in any gaps to protect essential spending in retirement from market volatility. As relevant, we will work together to analyze the possibilities and your decisions related to six basic reliable income sources, including Social Security claiming, annuities, company pensions and other employer benefits, bond income ladders, employment or other income-earning opportunities in retirement, and the potential role of a reverse mortgage. We are looking for complementary tactics to meet your needs, and it would be a rare case when all of these tactics are implemented at the same time.

The next asset section of the RIO-Map is the diversified portfolio. The diversified portfolio can be used most effectively to meet lifestyle and legacy goals, which translate into the liabilities related to discretionary expenses and legacy. Here we review your investments as well as your views, attitudes, and knowledge about investing. While there are numerous investment strategies and many ways to construct a diversified portfolio, you want to make sure yours is compatible with the framework needed when investing for retirement income.

There is more at stake here than just identifying an asset allocation. We seek to determine how well you are positioned to effectively capture market rates of return, how you have practically managed your portfolio in the past, and what are your strengths and weaknesses in investment knowledge or application that could lead to good or poor outcomes. Specifically, we need to consider:

1. Investment philosophy: What is your investment philosophy, and how has it been applied to your portfolio? It is important to have a good understanding of the long-term determinants of market returns based on scientific foundations, not consumer misinformation. Have you paid attention to investment costs and tax efficiency? Have you focused on lower-cost passive investments that support a better chance for success, or have you instead focused on chasing returns and on whatever is in vogue? How
