

approach and the safety-first approach. My website seeks to provide an understanding about both so readers can better determine the best approach for their personal circumstances, and McLean Asset Management shares this objective with me. Originally, I thought my website would be of most interest for sophisticated consumers who are approaching retirement and have a good understanding of the basics of investments and insurance. But I have found that this education is equally valued by financial advisors, and so my audience is split between the two groups.

There are plenty of financial education websites aimed at consumers, but they tackle it from a different angle. My aim is to build a website that empowers readers about retirement income and further expands into other areas important for an effective retirement. The key is to provide readers with a clearinghouse of knowledge, which allows them to take the best of what is empirically valid in a cohesive manner and digest at their own pace what they need. So, let's take a step back and seek to better quantify the value of good financial decision-making.