

The first half of 2020 through July saw department stores down 63%; airlines off 55%; travel services down 51%; oil and gas equipment and services down 51%; resorts and casinos down 45%; and hotel and motel real estate investment trusts off 42%. The next 15 industry sectors in the index were down between 31% and 42%. And that's four months after the market rebounded from the lows of late March. The table shows performance for various sectors for January 2020 to July 2020.

Sector performance, January 2020 to July 2020

Sector	Performance	Sector	Performance
Department Stores	–63%	Banks – Regional	–33%
Airlines	–55%	Insurance – Life	–32%
Travel Services	–51%	Leisure	–31%
Oil & Gas Equipment & Services	–51%	Pharmaceutical Retailers	–31%
Resorts & Casinos	–45%	Auto Manufacturers	–30%
Oil & Gas E&P	–43%	Beverages – Brewers	–30%
REIT – Hotel & Motel	–42%	REIT – Healthcare Facilities	–30%
Oil & Gas Refining & Marketing	–42%	Real Estate Services	–29%
Apparel Manufacturing	–40%	Luxury Goods	–28%
REIT – Retail	–40%	Advertising Agencies	–28%
Oil & Gas Midstream	–39%	Insurance – Diversified	–26%
Lodging	–39%	Steel	–25%
Food Distribution	–38%	REIT – Residential	–24%
Banks – Diversified	–38%	Aerospace & Defense	–23%
Oil & Gas Integrated	–35%	Building Materials	–22%

These are highly visible industries, with companies that are well-covered by the news media—all household names well-known to consumers. Retailers are everywhere we go. Gas stations, chain restaurants and hotels are ubiquitous in cities and suburbs across the country. Even though most Americans only fly a few times a year, we plan family trips and vacation travel to places with theme parks, resorts, hotels, and casinos.

A reasonable person might have argued that GDP fell by about a third in the