Somebody always nails tops and bottoms by sheer luck. The right call for all the wrong reasons is of no help to investors. What they need is a rational, repeatable process.

I was surprised to realize that the bear markets that matter the least were those where I had the most money on the line. We find out why that is next.

212
Barry Ritholtz, "Apprenticed Investor: The Folly of Forecasting," TheStreet.com (June 7, 2005).
213 Leslie P. Norton, "Barry Ritholtz and Josh Brown Won't Predict The Market, But They'll Talk About Anything Else," Barron's (December 18, 2020).