

318 Barry Ritholtz, “The Danger of Dogma,” The Big Picture (July 27, 2003).

319 As I discussed in Bailout Nation, other conditions were forming that would also hasten the end of the sell-off. Markets were not only deeply oversold, but once again the Fed was cutting rates—this time, rates went down to zero. Congress forced the accounting rule-making body to be more accommodating to the banking sector. FASB 157, as it is known, ended “mark-to-market accounting,” allowing banks to hide their bad loans.

320 Callie Cox is Chief Market Strategist at Ritholtz Wealth Management.

321 Barry Ritholtz, “WSJ Jumps the Shark,” The Big Picture (January 22, 2010).