

Since failure is inevitable, we need to discuss how to fail better. That's next.

444 Suze Orman, "If you waste money on coffee, it's like 'peeing $1 million down the drain,'" CNBC (March 28, 2019).

445 Both Thomas Gilovich and Alan Krueger have written that experiences bring greater happiness than material goods. See Daniel Kahneman and Alan B. Krueger, "Developments in the Measurement of Subjective Well-Being," Journal of Economic Perspectives 20:1 (Winter 2006).

446 Special thanks to Heleine Olen, who has written about this extensively, both in her book Pound Foolish and online. As a guest on Masters in Business, she went off on the "gurus, pundits, self-anointed experts, crackpots, cranks, and outright frauds who populate the backwaters and slipstreams of American finance." You definitely want to hear what she has to say about Orman...

447 We really have no idea what the level of reinvested dividends will be for the next four decades—they have been falling for the past four decades, so $350k looks to be a very high guess.

448 According to the Securities and Exchange Commission's compound interest calculator, that works out to about $350,000.

449 I understand a straight-line percentage raise of median income does not reflect the complex reality of how most workers' earnings' curve behaves, but it is a good ballpark figure to show some context for that denominator blindness.

450

Sallie Krawcheck, CEO and co-founder of Ellevest, points out how much bigger of an issue the gender pay gap is versus latte prices: "Just buy the fing latte," Fast Company (May 6, 2019). Note: Fast Company stole my headline!

451 Walter Mischel and Ebbe B. Ebbesen, "Attention in delay of gratification," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology (1970), 16(2), pp. 329–337.