

Hollis and Blair duQuesnay, also deserve mention for their sage counsel and insights. Matt Cerminaro makes all of our charts look great, and his work is seen throughout this book.

My partners, Kris Venne and Jay Tini, have taught me so much over the years about what good advisors do for their clients. If you found the Good Advice section useful, credit them (if not, blame me for failing to learn what they taught). They also work with our amazing team of 30 CFP advisors, who do incredible work for our clients every day.

Everyone quoted, cited, or written about in the book deserves special thanks. However, a few standouts truly influenced me: The behaviorists David Dunning, Dick Thaler, Bob Shiller, Thomas Gilovich, and the late, great Danny Kahneman, have all profoundly shaped my thinking.

Additionally, the people I have been privileged to get to know beyond a few hours of Masters in Business interview time have been intellectual mentors (whether they knew it or not). Ray Dalio on learning from our mistakes, Howard Marks on second-level thinking, Scott Galloway on carving your own path, and Cliff Asness for maintaining a sense of humor throughout. Ed Hyman and Ed Yardeni have deeply affected how I think about the relationship between the economy and markets.

Jeff Weitzman, Jonathan Miller, Dave Nadig, Josh Frankel, Michael Batnick, Brian Hamburger, and Ralph Sevush have given me endless sage counsel over the years. Their insights are reflected in mine. Nobody has given me more love, support, and insight than my wife Wendy.

Whom else might I have forgotten? I guess one final thank you is needed: To Wall Street, whose avarice, incompetence, and recklessness made this book both possible and necessary. I could not have done any of this without you...
