

As you can see, high-interest credit card debt is a very slippery slope. If you are only making the monthly payment but still using your card regularly, your total debt is probably going up each month, even if it is only a small amount. It may not happen overnight, but if you are not careful, you can end up in a situation where it is almost impossible to get out of your debt.

Adam, on the other hand, always pays his credit card debt in full every month, never has to pay any interest, and will live happily ever after.
