

deal is not going to last.” False. This is actually a sales technique called “The Impending Event,” which tries to convince you to act quickly. Ignore it and don’t let anyone rush you on such an important decision.

- They will make you feel like they are going out on a limb for you. “My boss is going to kill me, but I can try and give it to you for $_____.” False. If the boss was actually going to be mad, the sale wouldn’t go through.
- They will claim you are getting a good deal because of the low monthly payments. False. Monthly payments are not important. The only thing you should care about is how much money the car is going to cost you.

It is important to be aware of these tactics beforehand. When it comes time to go to the dealership and discuss the price, you should have some negotiation strategies of your own:

- Let them make the first offer. In negotiations, it is often said that “he/she who speaks first, loses.” For example, maybe a car is priced at $16,000, but the dealership is actually willing to sell it for $14,500. The only way to find out is to let them make the first offer.
- Take your quotes to multiple dealerships. Don’t fall in love with the first car you see. Once a dealership has quoted you a price, take it to the next dealership and see if they can beat it. If all goes well, you may have dealerships competing to bid the lowest price.
- Start negotiating at the lower, realistic end of the price range. If your research shows a car is valued between $13,000–$16,000 and the dealership is trying to sell the car for $15,500, see if they will consider $13,500.
