

she would need a roommate. She is also spending too much on transportation. She is spending more than 10% of her budget on transportation, which she really cannot afford because she has already gone so far over budget on housing. Also, if she were to buy a used car with good gas mileage, she could get her costs below $500 a month for transportation.

I also have a problem with her "miscellaneous" category being $500. If you are going to include a category for random expenses, it should not eat up 10% of your budget. A budget is about controlling every dollar you make; having such a large portion of your money set aside for unclear expenses will kill your budget. In addition, Trinity's gym membership is overpriced. If it were her one luxury item, it would be fine, but because she has too many other categories that are over budget, she cannot justify the cost. Lastly, she should be paying way more toward her student debt. Paying the minimum is a sucker's game, and it will cost her much more in the long run.
