

transportation. Because she has made sacrifices in these categories, she can pursue the things she cares about with the rest of her money without feeling guilty. Not only is she going to more concerts and attending more events, she is also saving $700 more every month, and paying $500 more toward her debt! Again, she is having a blast and taking advantage of her youth, while simultaneously preparing for her future.

The sizable difference in these two budgets is likely luxury items. Trinity probably rents a luxury apartment by herself, drives an expensive, “cool” car, and goes to the exclusive gym. Tamara, on the other hand, has decided to pass on these indulgences to treat herself in other ways and to invest her money more wisely.
