

Antoinette Bekos's top tips

Antoinette Bekos's career includes a decade as head of the hair and make-up department at Network Ten (looking after The Circle and The Project), work at the ABC and a client list including Myer, David Jones, Rolex and Swisse. She has tended tresses and complexions for Logie and Brownlow Medal red carpets, and is Hugh Jackman's go-to groomer when he tours Australia. Sneak a look in her bookings diary and find names like Susan Sarandon, Carrie Bickmore and Dave Hughes. Bekos has her own make-up line, which is made in New York, and runs classes at her business AB Pro Lab, teaching men and women how to reduce their bathroom cabinet to the basics.

abhairandmakeup.com.au

Instagram: @ab.hairandmakeup

- Spend the money on your main features. A well-matching foundation and a primer or a moisturiser (no need for both). When you're on a budget, focus on your skin and everything else will sparkle. Revlon is 'amazing' for foundations – at $30–$35 a bottle – and have been a long-time staple in professional artists' kits. Primers are an extra step that you can cancel to save money.
- To make your foundation last several months longer, apply it with your fingers. Sponges and brushes used by YouTube beauty gurus soak up – and waste – a lot of the product. Dollop the foundation on the back of your hand and softly rub to warm it up before applying. 'Foundation brushes are great for make-up artists to use for hygiene reasons, but you don't need one for yourself.'
- Use an eyelash curler to open up your peepers. This makes any mascara, even the cheaper brands, perform with more oomph.
- Use an eyebrow pencil to shape, fill and polish.
- Buy a bronzer, which will work twice as hard as a contour and eyeshadow, for a natural wash of colour. Build up the intensity on your eyes to a smoky depth, or apply a light sheen for work and weekends.

Make-up products without the price tag