

Stephen Koukoulas, managing director, Market Economics – @TheKouk

Alex Joiner, chief economist, IFM Investors – @IFM_Economist

Chris Kohler, Domain national business editor – @_chriskohler

Alan Kohler, ABC business guru and author of The Constant Investor – @AlanKohler

Peter Martin, economics editor, The Age – @1petermartin

Mark Bouris, executive chairman, Yellow Brick Road; you might know him as the scary boss who fired people on The Apprentice Australia – @markbouris

Will Willits, online news editor, Australian Financial Review – @WillWillAFR

Organisations

Charter Keck Cramer, property advisory firm – @CharterKC

Microburbs, property and postcode data and research company – @microburbs

Herron Todd White, valuation and buyers' advocacy – @HerronToddWhite

First Home Buyers Australia, savings, mortgage and property search advice – @fhba_com_au

Understanding interest rates

Leading economist Saul Eslake has a passionate position on the plight of first home buyers and is a whiz on historical and contemporary finance issues. His website, saul-eslake.com, has a wealth of insights. You may want to swap your ASOS bookmark for his homepage.

Eslake, now practising independently, is the former chief economist for ANZ and Bank of America Merrill Lynch, and a Vice-Chancellor's Fellow at the University of Tasmania, among other positions. He's surprised more young Australians aren't angry about the state of the housing market. There is no doubt many of us are disillusioned and peeved, but we haven't perhaps been vocal enough to effect what change is even possible.

Former Treasurer Joe Hockey provided the ammunition at a press conference in Sydney in 2015: