

- Anti-panty line

Even cheaper clothes will fall beautifully over under-garments that fit to form, foregoing lumps and bumps. ‘Too many people don’t invest in great fitting underwear that makes outer garments look even better.’

- Accessories

‘For me, this is the essence of self-expression, be it with sophisticated, quality keepsake pieces or everyday, colourful chunky-style pieces. For those who don’t know any way to update their wardrobe often, or can’t afford to, something as simple as a scarf, a bold necklace or earrings can change a garment entirely and express a whole other style.’

The spend recycle

I have held several market stalls and online sales over the years to cull wasteful purchases. As I watched my savings grow, so too did my enthusiasm and willingness to cut back on what I owned. And once I had my wardrobe down to a reasonable collection, I adopted what I call the ‘spend recycle’ approach to keeping myself clothed. When I need a pair of trousers for work, I sell a handbag on eBay, and so on. If I really, truly need to add to my closet, something else has to go, and the money from the sale pays for the replacement.

Warehouse sales

Australia’s seasons are not as delineated as the northern hemisphere’s, so it is common for local clothing brands to have excess stock that can be worn year round. Past season collections and sample sales are rolled out every weekend around Australia, and if you are willing to roll up your sleeves and dig, and disregard trends, then you’ll find a sensible buy. My best warehouse finds? A $700 Lover blazer reduced to $10, and a $1500 Camilla and Marc wool coat down to $50.

The best sites to buy clothes on the cheap