

Missy Confidential

missyconfidential.com.au

My go-to for the warehouse and factory outlet sales. Search by your state and get a rundown of who, what – and wear.

The Age and Sydney Morning Herald Sales Whisperer Subscribe to the newsletter to get a dump of cut-price designer duds weekly, curated by the fashion editor.

The Real Real

therealreal.com

An international consignment website heaving with pre-loved designer clothes and accessories. Consignment means that the e-boutique is selling the garment for its owner. It is common to find Manolo Blahnik heels, Chanel skirts, Dior cufflinks and Gucci men's shirts here for under $100. The one catch is that postage to Australia is pricey; $50 at last check.

Sell up

If you have had a splurge and need to repent by selling some clothes off, there are stores around Australia that will sell on your behalf and retain a portion of the price. This is an ideal arrangement if you're too busy to manage the almighty cull by yourself, or aren't aware of the resale value of pieces you spent a stack on – designer goods hold their value, like higher-end cars.

The saying goes that the French don't get fat, and it also seems they don't waste money on clothes. Dépôts-ventes are consignment shops where stylish men and women clear out past season purchases. The owner of the dépôt-vente keeps a slice of the sale price as remuneration for their services – the cost of listing, advertising, postage and handling the transaction. It's much less time-consuming than selling at markets, if you are happy to forgo part of the profits.

Here's a guide to the best designer second-hand stores in Australia – our equivalent of dépôts-ventes – and the merchandise they tend to accept, so you can find the right seller to flog your old purchases. And if you have a special occasion to dress for, and truly, honestly, no-lies need something to